Tilden faced the holder of what is Johnston Has Easy Time

The Johnston-Anderson match was ers was followed with exceptional attention. Tilden came through the conflict with honors untarnished and the claim of his admirers that he is one of the greatest, if not the greatest player in the world today, apparently was no match for Johnston today.

Anderson could not match Johnston speed afoot, his wizardry with the requet or his generalship.

The Californian raced him from side to side of the court, pulled him up toto the net with soft shots and then device him him beds with labor will labor will be the side of the court. drove him back with lobs until al-most every rally ended in a wide op-ening for the winner's finishing stroke. ening for the winner's finishing stroke. Anderson improved at the rate of one game a set but never was in a position where he appeared to threaten his conqueror. He occasionally uncovered some pretty nice line passing and a few times from close to the net augled off ungettable strokes. During a great majority of the match, he was on the defensive end and piled up many errors in his efforts to stroke Johnston's fiercely driven and ichopped returns. The Australian made 81 errors, more than half of made $1 errors, more than balt of which were outs nd earned but 17 points. Less than one fifth of the pportunities presented to him. John-ton, a personification of steadiness, made 39 errors and 13 earned points. His percentage being exactly one third of earned points to errors. Anderson's Showing a Surprise

Anderson's poor showing was a sur-prise to Johnston and other leading tennis players who had watched him in workouts before today's matches. His game in practice was far better than that of his brilliant team mate, Patterson and he was expected to force Johnston to the limit. Anderson himself could not account for the soft himself could not account for the soft game he displayed against Johnston. "I just could not force myself to my best game in the rallies." he said. The only comment made by Pat-terson after the matches was: "Rattling good tennis, eh?" Pat O'Hara Wood, who will team with Patterson in the doubles, said: "Better luck tomorrow, maybe. We hope to delay the cup game until Monday."
